HARKISHAN SINGH

Professor Harkishan Singh is a prominent medicinal chemist and a science historian. He has worked with the premier institutions like the Banaras Hindu University, University of Saugar, and the Panjab University at home, and abroad at the Universities of London, Maryland, and Mississippi. Presently, he is Professor Emeritus at the Panjab University. He has been intimately involved in the working of several professional and statutory bodies.

Professor Singh's areas of history research pertain to pharmaceutical and related developments in India during the last two centuries. His publications have been very well received. His standing as a historian has been recognised in his election to the Académie Internationale d'Histoire de la Pharmacie.

Several medico-pharmaceutical professionals have contributed to pharmaceutical developments in the country. Brevet Colonel Sir Ram Nath Chopra and his onetime associates Professor Khem Singh Grewal and Dr Bishnupada Mukerji stand out for their direct involvement in the building of modern pharmacy in India. Where they distinguished as pharmacologists, their role in making of pharmacy was equally important. Their lives and professional achievements are profiled in this monograph.
